2 Probes Underway

The fire in December at a Northwest Side restaurant is being probed in separate state and federal investigations, it was learned Tuesday.

The restaurant involved is the Northbrook Inn, 9601 N.

124th St. The fire, listed by the Milwaukee Fire Department as of undetermined cause, resulted in about $7,000 damage to the restaurant, and attached shed.

Sources said witnesses in the investigations by federal authorities and the Organized Crime Unit of the district attorney's office include former and present employees of Sally's Steak House, 1028 E. Juneau Ave.

One of the witnesses, who appeared before the Doe, being conducted by County Judge Robert J. Miech, was Kurt Amidzich, a former chef at Sally's.

Amidzich, who reportedly went into partnership with two other men last fall to operate the Northbrook, was granted immunity on Friday to answer questions in the secret Doe.

He is now a cook at the Towhe Room East, 915 E. State St., sources said.

Employees Of Sally's Tied to Doe

A two pronged investigation is underway here involving employes and former employes of Sally's Steak House, a popular East Side restaurant it was learned Monday.

Federal sources said a John Doe investigation began in Milwaukee County last week while a federal grand jury is hearing related information.

Several persons named by sources as being connected with the investigations either are or were employes of Sally's, 1028 E. Juneau Ave.

The John Doe investigation before County Judge Robert J. Miech reportedly is concentrating on a fire at a far Northwest Side restaurant which was operated by a former chief at Sally's.

Miech refused to comment on the investigation or to confirm that he was conducting a John Doe investigation.

Court records showed that Miech last Friday granted immunity to Kurt Amidzich, a former chief at Sally's, after Amidzich had refused to testify. The records do not indicate the nature of the questions Amidzich refused to answer.

Sources said that Amidzich, while working at Sally's, borrowed $5,000 from Mrs. Sally Papia, the owner, to buy a new car.

Shortly after Amidzich stopped working at Sally's and opened the Northbrook Inn, at 9601 N. 124th St. with some friends.

On Dec. 30, a fire at Northbrook caused an estimated $7,000 damage. The fire was in a storage shed attached to the restaurant. Equipment in the shed was damaged and smoke damaged the restaurant.

Amidzich has left Northbrook and is now working at the Towne Room East, 911 E. State St. — a restaurant about three blocks from Sally's.

Two key figures in the investigation are employed at Sally's, sources said.

Several employes and a former employe are expected to testify Tuesday before the federal grand jury.

The federal grand jury reportedly is looking into underworld ties.

Federal officials are holding one person in protective custody as part of the investigation, sources said.

Federal and local officials are working together on the investigation, sources said. Information relating to federal crimes is being presented to the grand jury while criminal activity that falls only under state jurisdiction is being presented to the John Doe, the sources explained.
